

EarthLinks at the Roots: A Conclusion

Dear "EarthLinks at the Roots" readers,

This is the last entry of the "At the Roots" series. I just wanted to say thank you to all of you who have read these blog entries over the past few months! I genuinely hope you have learned something useful that you have been able to apply to your daily life. I've always felt that the beauty of EarthLinks is that all of our work involves empowering everyone to take care of themselves, take care of each other, and take care of our world. Though my time here at EarthLinks has ended, I know that I have learned a great deal here from the participants, the staff, and all of those hours of research, about what it means to really live a sustainable life, and how to sustain others.

If you aren't already involved in EarthLinks or haven't already started your own journey to sustainable living and caring for those around you, I strongly believe it is time to start. Know that if you ever need a hand on exactly how to go about worm composting, or what you can do for your local shelters, you can always ask us or our participants- we are all always willing to help!

Sincerely,

Ana
